

Introduction:

100 years after Lincoln issued the Emancipation Proclamation, many black people in America were still not free. To demand equal rights for everyone, Dr. King delivered this speech in 1963.

Body: Dr. King's Dream

This dream is deeply rooted in the American Dream. It is the creed of the American nation that all men are created equal.

One day, injustice and oppression will be transformed into freedom and justice. Black kids and white kids will be able to join hands as sisters and brothers.

One day, black children will live in a nation where they will not be judged by the color of their skin, but by the content of their character.

With faith and hope, people everywhere can conquer all the difficulties they face and stand up for freedom together.

Conclusion:

On the day when Dr. King's dream comes true, everyone in the country will be able to enjoy true freedom and justice.
